

Vīrudha-Āhāra Māraṇa – The Energetic Food Poison Curse

This is one of the least visible yet most insidious forms of Māraṇa. It operates through energetic poisoning of the victim's food stream, often by ritualistically corrupting the prāṇa of what the victim consumes—physically or mentally.

Used in Kaula, Vāma, and Bhūta Tantra, this method doesn't require direct contact, but uses food (or its energetic twin) as a carrier of destruction.

🕒 I. Prerequisites & Conditions

🕒 Ritual Conditions:

Must be performed during Krishna Pakṣa, especially Chaturdaśī, Amāvasyā, or during Grahaṇa (eclipse).

Day: Tuesday or Saturday

Location: Kitchen shrine, cremation field, or near an anthill or termite mound (symbol of digestive decay)

Fasting for 1 day before the ritual is recommended

□ II. Ingredients & Materials

Material	Purpose
----------	---------

Victim's food remnants / plate	DNA & Prāṇa link
--------------------------------	------------------

Old or spoiled grain/flour	Symbolic corruption of Anna Maya Kosha
----------------------------	--

Cow dung ash or cremation ash	Embodiment of mrityu tattva
-------------------------------	-----------------------------

Dried chillies + black mustard	Digestive irritation & heat
--------------------------------	-----------------------------

Garlic skin, onion skin	Tamasic binding agents
-------------------------	------------------------

Crushed bitter neem leaves	Disease invocation
----------------------------	--------------------

Oil used for corpse bathing (if accessible)	Death resonance
---	-----------------

Black turmeric + Triphala powder	Tridoshic imbalance triggers
----------------------------------	------------------------------

Bone fragment of bird/rat/cat	Carries roaming spirit energy (bhūta infuser)
-------------------------------	---

□ III. Pre-Ritual Energy Activation

Prepare a Bhūta Bhakṣaṇa Piṇḍa (spirit food ball):

Mix spoiled grains, neem powder, mustard, garlic skin, and cow dung ash into a dough ball.

On this dough ball, inscribe: “□□□□□ □□□□ □□□□” (Let this food become poison).

Dry under moonlight for 3 nights while reciting:

[illegible]

(108x each night)

IV. Ritual Execution

Step 1: Remote Infusion via Victim's Plate or Name

If you have access to the victim's used plate, utensils, or photo:

Place the plate on a black cloth with a red triangle drawn on it.

Put the dried dough-ball on the plate.

Chant this mantra:

[illegible]

(Repeat 108 times)

With every 9th chant, sprinkle triphala + black turmeric powder onto the plate.

Burn incense made of dried rat bones, chillies, and mustard.

Face South and invoke: “□□□□□□□□ □□□□□□□□, □□□ □□□□□ □□□□
□□□□□□□”

Leave the cursed ball overnight under a thorny tree or bury it near a marketplace where food is sold.

The food poisoning doesn't show up medically but causes:

Sudden loss of appetite or uncontrollable overeating

Diseases like ulcers, IBS, Crohn's, gallbladder stones

Hallucinations of being “fed filth,” nausea after rituals

Aversion to prasada or sattvic food

Fatigue, emotional dullness, or detachment

 VI. Countermeasures

Method	Action
Anna Shuddhi Vidhi	Food cleansing with Ganga water + tulsi + ghee lamp daily
Sudarśana Homa	Fire ritual to burn food karma
Bagalāmukhī Jīvana Kavacha	Protective mantra to neutralize digestive curse
Daily Ajwain + Rock Salt + Camphor Smoke	Natural neutralizer for digestive māraṇa

 Summary Table: Vīrudha-Āhāra Māraṇa

Aspect	Details
Type	Energetic Food Curse
Tools Used	Spirit-infused food items, victim’s utensils, mantras
Symptoms	Gut decay, food aversion, spiritual nausea, dullness
Targets	Anna Maya Kosha, digestive fire, mood and mind
Reversal Methods	Sudarshana Homa, Bagala mantra, Ajwain rituals

Risk to User Recoil if food consumed by unintended person

Dharmic Status Extremely discouraged unless used for defense

Initiation Required? Yes, Kaula / Vāma / Aghora lineage
